Dear Editor,

I would like to thank the parents of the students of the Beverly Hills Unified School District. Teachers, counselors, office staff, and instructional assistants all rely on your support to make our educational mission successful. Through good times and bad, the long-lasting bonds that educators and parents form are crucial to guiding the children of our community to academic achievement.

As this school year draws to a close, parents can take pride in the accomplishments of their children. The ceremonies and awards programs that are so prevalent in the month of June embody the years of hard work put forth by students, parents, and educators.

Challenges await us at every turn...but together, parents and educators can make a positive difference. Whether it's helping a child grasp a hard homework concept or delivering persuasive arguments to politicians for adequate resources for our schools...parents and educators in our school community share a passion for caring about students. We know how important it is to give back to the next generation.

The parents of Beverly Hills schools are well-represented by the leaders of our PTAs. I encourage parents to always play an active role in the PTA...from preschool to high school. I thank our district's parents for entrusting your children with the educators who make up the 450 members of the Beverly Hills Education Association.
